County Conscription Registration Lists 1,436; 6 Precincts Missing

DRAFT SIGN-UP TOTAL ABOVE ESTIMATES

Preliminary Work May Be Completed Saturday; Dykstra Takes Oath

IF THERE is any young man of draft age in El Dorado County who has not had opportunity to register for selective service, he should report immediately to the draft board in the basement of the postoffice in Placerville, explain the circumstances which made it impossible for him to register on Wednesday and ask the draft board's consent to registering now.

The penalties for failure to register at this time are severe, but are not to be compared with the stigma attaching to a young man's character through such failure, which will follow him all through life.

Any who were unable to register on Wednesday must immediately attend to it, NOW.

Returns from thirty-nine of the 44 registration precincts in El Dorado County show that a total of 1,436 county residents were registered in those precincts Wednesday in the Selective Service sign-up.

This is according to H. P. Brown, secretary of the local Selective Service Board, who said an additional 227 were registered in El Dorado County whose cards will be forwarded to their home precincts, outside the county.

The returns from the six missing precincts will be added to this total upon receipt, it was understood.

The Manila Herald said the officer was a captain in the Fort McKinley engineering corps and a graduate of West Point.

CARSON SPUR AUTO DEATH HELD ACCIDENT BY INQUEST JURY

A coroner's inquest Wednesday night returned a verdict holding the death of Morris Harlan, on September 9th, an accident.

Harlan, employed by a Stockton newspaper, was killed when his car ran off the Carson Spur on the Alpine Highway and crashed 400 feet into the canyon.

The body was found several days later and it was said by Coroner J. J. Danierl, of Amador County, that from the appearance of the body Harlan died Sept. 9th.

Although there was no evidence to show that Harlan sought to avoid the wreck, there was an absence also of conclusive evidence that the tragedy was a deliberate act.

Ellis Vennwitz was foreman of the jury.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Gates, of Placerville, are parents of a son, Lucius A. Gates, born October 7 at the Sanatorium.

HIGH SCHOOL CALF PROJECTS STIR STOCKMEN'S INTEREST

Modesto Future Farmers Meet With Success In Purchases Of Steer Calves For Feeding From El Dorado County Cattle Ranches

MODESTO — Steer calf feeding projects instituted in 1937 through the agricultural department of Modesto High School to provide an outlet for by-products from the farms of boy members of the department, are proving profitable for the student ranchers and interesting to cattlemen of El Dorado County, from whom the calves were obtained.

Although the original 1937 purchase of calves was seven head a purchase of forty steer calves within recent weeks, added to those already on feed make a total of one hundred and five head which are being fed out by seventeen different members of the Modesto High School chapter of Future Farmers on their home farms. More purchases are planned.

The recent purchase of forty head was from R. S. Swift, of Shingle Springs. The calves are bought by the boys and fed out as the supervised practice part of their training in vocational agriculture.

The calves recently purchased were weaned on the summer range of Swift's and were loaded on trucks at Riverton on the Placerville-Lake Tahoe Highway. They are the second lot taken by the Modesto Future Farmers this year.

The first load, which in addition to Swift's calves, included nineteen head consigned by Archie Lawyer of Uncle Tom's Cabin, was purchased in August.

The boys expect to take delivery on a third lot from the Swift's winter range near Shingle Springs early in November which will make about one hundred and fifty head to be fed by Modesto Chapter members this year.

According to J. E. Walker, director of agriculture at Modesto High School, the calves were introduced into the project program of the students as a means of utilizing the by-products of the farm which would otherwise be wasted or sold off the land.

The rationing includes bean straw, peanut hulls, peanut hulls, almond hulls, low grade alfalfa, sudan hay and pea vine silage. The grain ration, which is ground, mixed and distributed by the cooperatively owned feed mill of the Modesto Future Farmers, included split beans. (Continued on Page Four)

NEW JUROR IN AUTO DEATH HEARING

Hearing Resumes Thursday With J. G. Hearn Seated For Woman Taken Ill

The trial of Ralph McElyea, charged with negligent homicide, was resumed in Superior court on Thursday morning following continuance from Monday, with Joseph G. Hearn as a new member of the jury, replacing Mrs. Florence Spicer.

It was the sudden illness of the woman juror on Monday which caused a continuance in the hearing until Thursday morning. On Tuesday, in view of the probability that Mrs. Spicer would be unable to return to her place as a juror, by which Mr. Hearn was seated as a stipulation of attorneys a special venire of seven was issued from juror Thursday morning.

After this had been accomplished, attorneys for both sides stipulated that the court reporter should read from his notes the proceedings in the trial to date, for the information of the new juror, and upon the completion of that work, which was expected to occupy all day Thursday, the trial would proceed with the defense calling other witnesses.

Mrs. Spicer had been taken suddenly ill Monday morning and was removed to Placerville Sanatorium where she remained a patient during the week. Wednesday afternoon it was reported her condition showed improvement.

Trial of the case had opened Tuesday of last week, with the jury being completed Wednesday morning, when presentation of the state's case was started, concluding at mid-afternoon Thursday. The defense opened then, and late Friday after- (Continued on Page 2)

Pair Killed In Cabin Fire

Auto Court Suffers Heavy Damage In Blaze, Possibly Due To Defective Heater

REDDING, (UP)—John Oakley, San Francisco, and another person believed to be Thomas Bell, also of the Bay City, were burned to death in an auto cabin one-half mile north of here early today.

Police were informed by Oakley's mother in San Francisco that the two men were musicians and had left for Redding yesterday to seek employment.

Bert Scheat, proprietor of the auto court where Oakley registered at 4 a. m. this morning, said the fire was preceded by two explosions.

A butane stove had been installed in the cabin yesterday, Schoat said, and firemen believed it was possible the mechanism had developed a leak causing an explosion when Oakley attempted to light the stove.

The fire burned four cabins, a three-room office building and Oakley's automobile before it was extinguished. Seven other cabins were saved.

Damage to the auto court was estimated at approximately $12,000.

MADRE DE ORO HAS STRIKE

Independence Mine, Near El Dorado, Yields New Riches On Lower Level

The current issue of Mining and Industrial News reports a "Sizable pocket of gold uncovered recently" in the Independence Mine, near El Dorado, operated by Madre de Oro Gold Mines, Inc., of which W. J. Loring is engineer.

"The Independence mine," says the publication, "is known as a producer of pockets of gold of considerable size for many years, some of the finds yielding as much as $60,000 and several having been in excess of $20,000. While extent of the present pocket is not yet known, it is taken as indication that the mine is not worked out since it was found at greater depth than any similar discoveries."

The Independent is one of three properties operated by Madre de Oro Gold Mines, Inc., the other two being the Starlight and the Church mines, all in the El Dorado vicinity.

The corporation has as its president Forrest Riley, a director of the Alhambra-Shumway Company, and includes in its directorate C. E. Halliburton and H. P. O. Crabtree, also Alhambra-Shumway directors, in addition to B. H. Winslow, vice-president; Miss Hazel Riley, secretary-treasurer; and J. B. Boyett, a director.

Also a director and managing engineer for the company, is W. J. Loring, a past president of the American Mining Congress and a mining man of wide experience.

Officials of the company report that:

"The Independence mine was taken over from the Hill Estate and the Starlight Mining Company last February, and work was commenced the latter part of February, and has continued since then, sinking the main winze and drifting at the 175 foot level.

"The past record of the Independence mine is such as to warrant its operation upon a scale that would prove its value, and try to repeat its past history, which is far and ahead of the famous Alhambra up to the time that the last big strike was made in it in September, 1939. The Independence mine has, according to records, produced up to the time of this company taking it over (Continued on Page 4)

LASHIO on the Burma Road, (Friday) — (UP)—Great Britain's ban on traffic over the Burma Road expired at midnight, reopening the mountain highway as a vital life-line in China's struggle against Japanese military conquest.

Defying Japanese threats to bomb the long mountain road from new air bases in French Indo-China, 5,000 sweating, singing Chinese coolies had labored all day Thursday to load 2,000 American-built trucks for dispatch in section over the highway to Chungking.

Street Work Nears Close

The widening and re-surfacing of Broadway, first unit of the projected city-wide street improvement program in co-operation with the WPA will be completed Thursday or Friday of this week, it was announced Thursday morning by City Councilman Philip Frost, in charge of streets.

Mr. Frost said the materials for the work were purchased by the city from their share of state gas tax funds and that all labor on the project was furnished or paid for by WPA so that the project was at no expense to the city tax rate.

It is reported that the state labor camp on Cedar Ravine is soon to be withdrawn, owing to the immediate lack of sufficient projects to keep the enrollment busy. In passing, and without definite record of the work the camp has accomplished, we can say generally that the vicinity now enjoys numerous improvements which would not have been possible at so reasonable cost, but for the state labor camp and the WPA. We hope their withdrawal may be a harbinger of better times, when all employable men will work in private industry.

Two Who Fled Lone Caught

Pair Are Reported Found In Stolen Car; 4 Others Are Still At Large

FRESNO — (UP) — Two of the six youths who escaped Monday night from the Preston School of Industry, state reformatory at Ione, were captured in Fresno today.

State highway patrolmen Wayne King and Rudy Eklund said they arrested the pair, identified as Dave Flores, 15, and Adolfo Miranda, 20, when the officers stopped an automobile that had been reported stolen.

Reformatory officials said the six inmates of the school escaped by clubbing and overpowering a guard, James Behrens. Officers said the two youths captured today did not resist arrest.

Flores was originally convicted in Fresno county and Miranda was sentenced to the reformatory from Kings county.

MARRIAGE MONEY

by JANE LITTELL

SYNOPSIS

Pike Arno, out of a job and not trying particularly hard to find one, is befriended by Leona Cheeny, a young New York stenographer. She is cautious about financial matters, and although Pike is urging her to marry him, she refuses until he gets a job or until her own meagre funds have been sufficiently supplemented.

She overhears some girls at the office telling how they eke out their maintenance by acting as co-repondents in divorce cases. Leona learns the name of one of the lawyers by whom they are employed, and summoning up all her courage, goes to his office for an interview.

If only she could earn a few hundred dollars for a "nest egg" she could then marry Pike.

Burgess, the lawyer, is doubtful whether this wide-eyed shabbily dressed girl, could ever affect the worldly guile necessary in cases of this kind. Gradually, the youthful beauty of the girl dawns upon his consciousness and he envisions her properly garbed.

Outside the office she hears him discussing her merits with Chet Harknet, who is seeking the divorce. They agree that, in evening clothes of the mode, the girl would be beautiful enough to make any wife jealous.

Harknet engages her and tells her to report that evening to his hotel.

At the appointed time Leona goes to Chet's apartment where a gorgeous evening ensemble awaits her. After the maid is finished with her, Chet is stunned by the transformation. Later, dancing with Chet at an exclusive restaurant, Leona is thrilled and happier than she had ever been before.

At the theatre, Christine, Chet's wife, makes sure that her friends see Chet and Leona. After the show, Leona returns to Chet's apartment for her clothes. Christine, believing Leona to be someone Chet is really interested in and not the employed co-respondent, stages her raid that night. When Chet tries to interfere, Leona tells him it is just as well to get the matter over with right away and save himself needless expense.

CHAPTER FIVE

"So this is what you do with my money," Christine's voice jibed at Chet. "You wouldn't go to Madeline's party because you couldn't afford to return her hospitality. But you feed champagne that MY money bought to—to this creature, and buy theater box tickets for her and humiliate me with your philandering! You—you fortune-hunting truck driver!"

"Get your cameras ready, you photographers," snapped Chet. "This child's right. One is enough to go through this."

He snatched off his coat and vest, gave his tie a jerk that untied it, ruffled up his hair, and turned to Leona, who was standing where he had left her, mouth working pitifully.

"Let your coat slide down over one shoulder, my dear," said Chet gently. "Slip one arm through a sleeve, and then let the coat slide. You can hide your face. That's right, honey. But don't cry so. It'll be over in a minute."

It seemed like an eternity of thrilling voices, booming flashlights, but at last it was over, and they all went away.

"It's all over now, child," he said gently. "Get yourself dressed. I must get you home."

The door closed behind him and Leona stood staring at it through her tears. He was so NICE! Oh, how could that horrid Christine prefer some other man to him? He was the grandest, gentlest man she had ever known in her life. And now she'd never see him again! Never wear that lovely velvet dress again either, or know the thrill of dancing in his arms or of coaxing a smile to his face—a smile that chased away that look of a little boy who had been terribly, terribly hurt and wanted desperately to cry it out but wouldn't because tears weren't manly.

A perfect storm of sobbing shook her and made slow work of donning her own shabby clothes. Still sobbing, she went over to the bed to touch the lovely garments she had worn that evening. It was as hopeless and as grief-stricken as a last farewell to the dead.

That low, monotonous sobbing seemed as if it would never stop. The man on the other side of the door stood it as long as he could and then he knocked. When she didn't answer he opened the door an inch and peeped in. She was standing there with one of those silver slippers in her hands, caressing it with her fingers—a picture of deep and unadvised woe. Of course, Chet misunderstood.

"Don't cry so, Leona," he said, opening the door. "You can have those things. All but the coat. I borrowed that."

"Oh, I couldn't! I'd love to, but I couldn't! Pike would find them, and he would think I'm the kind of a girl Christine is. He—oh, I can't!"

He finally caught her interest by handing her a check for a thousand dollars. It was practically all the Chet's technique was something that Pike in his years of roughneck fighting had never come up against.

money he owned in the world, but he wanted her to have it.

"Oh, I couldn't!" she gasped when she saw the amount. "Two hundred is the regular price. And this was to be for seven evenings. And it's only been one. I—I oughtn't to take any. It's been such a wonderful experience—"

"Knowing you," she wanted to say, but was too timid to say it. They argued about it, but Leona was firm. And in the end it was a check for two hundred instead of a thousand that she carried away in her cold little hands.

It wasn't a very long ride from Fifth Avenue and Sixty-first Street through the park to Tenth Avenue, but it was like going from one world to another. Leona, huddled down in her corner, still shook with occasional sobs. She was never going to see Chet again—and Chet had become important somehow.

She knew it was wicked to grieve about never seeing Chet again when she was going to marry Pike. She was more and more worried the closer she got home, too, for fear Pike would find out about this evening. He wouldn't believe her story. She knew he wouldn't. Pike was so awfully suspicious.

And it would be just like Pike to be waiting there in her room. He'd make her tell, too. He always could.

It was a silent ride, because Chet had a lot of thinking to do, too. And his thoughts had to do with a square shooting little girl like Leona who could just as well have accepted that check for a thousand dollars.

And Leona was glad he didn't talk. She was trying to fix up some story that would get by with Pike, if he was waiting there in her room for her to come home. And that wouldn't be easy, either, for her face was all swollen from crying. He'd want to know what she'd been crying about.

"Let me out at the corner, will you? It's safer," she said when they had reached her street.

"I'll drive along slowly," said Chet, "and guard you until you get your door open."

"Don't act as if you were watching if—if you see anybody," she cautioned. "My boy friend's awful jealous."

"Sure you won't come and have dinner with me again sometime?" he asked, loath to let her go like this.

"Oh, I couldn't! Pike would find out, and he wouldn't like it."

And then she was hurrying down the street, and the long car just kept pace with her. And then when she reached her very own doorway, there was Pike.

"What have you been up to?" he growled, shaking her.

"I've—I've been working!" she gasped. "Oh, Pike, don't be mad. It was for you."

"Yeah!" sneered Pike. "Working. For me. Till 2 in the morning! Like a story. What's that?" he demanded, snatching the folded and refolded check from her hands. Somebody's address and telephone number?"

He unfolded it, saw that it was a check, gave the girl one long look and snarled, "Why, you little hussy!"

And he emphasized that last word with a swing of his fist that raised a lump as big as an egg on Leona's cheek bone and stretched her flat on the sidewalk. It didn't knock her out, that blow; it just stunned her so that she couldn't get up for a few moments.

And in those few moments Chet Harknet was out of his car and mixing it with Pike Arno and giving Pike the surprise of his life.

"Aw, what business is it of yours—?" Pike began as Chet came at him furiously.

"Plenty," snapped Chet. "That girl was working—working honestly—to earn money for you. But I'm darned if you'll ever get it!"

"Oh, ye-ah?" jeered Pike, hastily putting that check into his pocket and settling himself to teach this butinsky some manners.

"Yes," said Chet, punctuating his remark with even a prettier blow than Pike had handed Leona.

"You—!" panted Pike, lunging.

It wasn't even a fair fight. Chet's technique was something that Pike in his years of roughneck fighting had never come up against. Chet measured his man, placed a fist exactly where it would do the most damage and stepped back out of danger before Pike's lumbering haymakers could touch him.

"Woman beater!" sneered Chet. "Grafter! Chiseler! Hoodlum! Gutter trash! Coward!"

And every insulting word was grunted out on the tail of a punch that landed where it was supposed to land—and stung.

"Now, take—THAT—and like it!"

"That" was the final blow that stretched Pike Arno out just as Leona staggered groggily to her feet, one hand investigating that awful hard lump that was swelling and swelling beneath her eye.

"Quick!" cried Chet, gathering up the helpless and unresisting girl and lifting her into his waiting car. "Here comes a cop!"

"But Pike—"

"The policeman will take care of Pike," said Chet grimly. "I've got to get you somewhere and see how much damage he did to you. Let me look."

"Something dreadful!" she whimpered. "My face is all crooked. There's an awful lump—"

There was an eye turning black, too, that Leona didn't know about yet. Chet ran his fingers over her face and she cringed away from the pain of his touch.

"Nothing broken," he said as cheerfully as his rage would let him. "Nothing the matter that time won't fix. But you're not going back to that house tonight. I'll take you to my own place and you can stay there until you're fit to be seen. I'll get a doctor and see if he can't reduce that swelling."

"To think Pike—my Pike—would strike me!" she mourned over and over, again. "Pike—of all people—"

"What else could you expect of a man like that?" asked Chet, stepping on the gas and tearing through the park as fast as he could go. "It is quite in character for a man who would take money from a woman to strike her. The lazy grafter!"

Leona opened her mouth to defend poor Pike—and then she thought of something else much more important.

"Oh, Chet!" she cried, aghast. "He's got your check! He'll know your name! He'll—he'll—Oh, Chet! He'll make trouble for you!"

"Good," said Chet grimly. "I'm in the telephone book and he won't have any trouble finding me. He'll get just about as far as he did a moment ago."

"But—but he might hurt you," she wailed, wringing her hands.

"Would you care?" asked Chet softly.

"O-oh, of course I'd care! I'd care tremendously! I—I couldn't bear to have him hurt you!" she cried.

"Then maybe you know how a felt when he hurt you," said Chet, pulling up at the curb in front of an apartment house.

Draft Sign-Up Above Estimate

the more than 16,000,000 men registered for military training.

Dykstra took his oath of office at a ceremony in Secretary of War Stimson's office.

Exceeds Estimates
SACRAMENTO, (AP) — Clerks of California's 58 counties today began the job of sorting close to 1,000,000 registration cards filled out by young men of draft age.

Adjutant Gen. R. E. Mittelstaedt expected to be able to determine with fair accuracy the number of registrants for selective service by tonight. He expressed amazement at the heavy registration, for preliminary figures indicated more than 975,000 had signed up when 900,000 were estimated in California. The estimate had been based on California's population by the census bureau.

By Saturday or Sunday it was expected local draft boards would have placed serial numbers on the cards for their districts, and authorities in Washington would be informed that California was ready for the nation's greatest peace-time lottery.

It appeared that the chances of registrants being called in the first draft would be about one in forty or forty-five.

Mittelstaedt and his staff faced two unexpected "shifts" in population for which they were unprepared.

The first was the trek to northern counties of duck hunters; the second was the appearance in San Joaquin Valley polling places of several thousand migrant workers who had been overlooked in preliminary estimates because being comparative nomads, they have not voted in the past.

National Guard airplanes were pressed into service to take registration blanks into Siskiyou county and even to Klamath Falls, Ore., where thousands of duck and deer hunters swamped the registration boards. They carried additional blanks to Salinas, Visalia and Bakersfield to care for the rush of migrants, while state highway patrolmen fanned out through the countryside reaching isolated spots where the congestion was unforeseen.

cull peanuts, cull raisins, cull figs and molasses. The calves are put on feed from the middle of August to the first of November when their weight will average about four hundred and fifty pounds. They are sold from April to June first, weighing from eight hundred and fifty to one thousand pounds.

The agriculture department of Modesto High School first became interested in steer feeding projects, as an outlet for the by-products from the boys' farms, in 1937. At that time seven head were bought from Swift and fed out on an experimental basis. The experiment proved to be so successful financially that the following year thirty-nine head were placed on the boys' home farms. The interest continued to grow and in 1939 Swifts supplied the chapter with seventy-one head.

According to Walker, because of the economical feeding program, the projects have netted the agricultural students from $5.00 to $24.83 per head. The top figure is an average made by John Rumble on his group of six animals.

The success of Rumble's project is well illustrated by his showing at the Stanislaus County Fair, where his entry won first place, and at the California State Fair where the same animal was entered in the Open Competition Carcass Contest. Here it placed fourth on foot and advanced to second prize in the dressed carcass competition. This showing was made without special feeding for show purposes. The steer was finished, the same as others in the group fed out by Rumble, on a ration utilizing the by-products of the farm.

As a result of this feeding program, instituted by the Future Farmers, one of their 1940 graduates, Bill Sciarini, with his father and uncle, plan to feed out ninety head of steers this year. The boy already purchased fifteen head of the Swift steers. In the feeding program on this ranch the splits and straw from one hundred and twenty acres of beans, two hundred tons of pea silage and home grown barley will form the bulk of the ration. In this way the fertility will all be returned to the soil instead of being sold off the ranch.

The projects are under the supervision of L. J. Banks, instructor in charge of dairy and beef projects in the agricultural department of Modesto High School.

Britain Opens Burma Road

near Constanza.

By UNITED PRESS

Great Britain awaited the zero hour for reopening the Burma Road today and at the other end of her far-flung front watched Spain for signs of a new Axis move.

The Burma Road held explosive possibilities for the far east. But in Spain signs suddenly appeared that a crisis for Britain may be shaping up closer to home.

Two events put Spain back in the headlines. Ramon Serrano Suñer, brother-in-law of Gen. Francisco Franco and the Axis' staunchest Spanish friend, became Spain's foreign minister. At the same time it was revealed that Heinrich Himmler, chief of Germany's famed secret police—the Gestapo—and one of Adolf Hitler's closest collaborators, was going to Spain for what was described officially as a "visit."

The meaning of these events was not plain but the British felt certain they boded no good for them.

Bad weather forced the Germans to relax their attack on Britain considerably. Strong fleets set off to attack the British Isles today but British reports indicated few of the planes got through the barrier of British defender planes and cloud blankets.

in February, 1940, $2,047 per foot of sinking, and the Alhambra was just a fraction less than half that amount for each foot of sinking up to the time that the big bonanza was struck in September, 1939.

"Since Madre de Oro started work on the Independent it has sunk the main winzee another lift and has drifted north from the bottom of the winzee and this is where the recent pocket was uncovered. It is located on a line with the big pockets that were taken out in former days by the late Seymour Hill. The indications are that this pocket may be followed by more substantial pockets, as the formation where the recent pocket was found is favorable for the deposition of gold, and it is expected the past history of the Independent mine will be carried on indefinitely.

"The mine is well equipped for this kind of a mine, with compressor machine drills and power hoist, and everything that is needed to develop and explore the property. There are twelve men employed by the company, and these will be added to shortly.

"The Madre de Oro Gold Mines, Inc., also are working the Church mine preparing it for supplying a mill of 100 tons capacity to be erected immediately."
